

Dr Sarah Green

As a practicing chiropractor, I feel incredibly grateful for the people I have the privilege of working alongside every day. Caring for patients and families in my community has shaped how I view responsibility, trust, and service—and it is why I am seeking re-election as the District 5 Council Member for the College of Chiropractors of Ontario (CCO).

The role of the College is to protect the public interest, and I take that responsibility to heart. As a Council member, you can expect me to be fair, impartial, prepared, and thoughtful in my decision-making. I approach this work with integrity, respect for differing perspectives, and a genuine commitment to listening carefully before forming conclusions. I do not bring any agenda or affiliation with advocacy groups—only a clear respect for the College’s regulatory mandate.

I have been a chiropractic patient since the age of seven. Those early experiences receiving care for injuries, pain, and headaches helped shape my understanding of how meaningful it can be to receive ethical, patient-centred care. Today, I practice alongside my husband in a busy small town clinic where we care for people from all stages of life—from newborns and expectant mothers to seniors, families, and individuals navigating physically and emotionally demanding careers.

Alongside clinical practice, I manage the business operations of our clinic and lead a small team of staff. Supporting others, creating clear systems, and balancing accountability with compassion are parts of leadership I value deeply. These experiences continue to inform my work on Council and committees, where careful preparation, respectful discussion, and sound judgment are essential.

I bring experience in professional regulation and board governance, and I am committed to ongoing learning in this role. I believe strong regulatory decisions are made when diverse perspectives are welcomed, questions are asked, and evidence is considered thoughtfully and ethically.

I also deeply respect the diversity within our profession. Chiropractors bring different strengths, interests, and approaches to patient care, and this diversity is a reflection of the communities we serve. When we respect one another’s differences and work collaboratively, we strengthen both public trust and our profession.

It is truly an honour to serve on CCO Council. I remain committed to doing this work with care, humility, and a steady focus on what is best for the public. I would be grateful for the opportunity to continue serving in this role.

Thank you for your time and consideration.

Dr. Sarah Green